

Since 2013, the photographer Reza thoroughly explored Iraqi Kurdistan that remains relatively little known despite the key role it plays in the Middle East. He witnessed a country and people living on the tightrope between war and peace, balancing their history with a desire for social and economic modernity, coping with the sorrows inflicted upon the Kurdish people and their steadfast hope for the recognition of their identity.